Hey there, short stuff

Willis Tower to lose 'tallest building' designation this year

Chicago Tribune

Chicago's skyline showpiece, Willis Tower, will lose its nickname this year as the nation's tallest building, but you wouldn't know it by visiting its Skydeck observatory and two well-stocked gift shops.

Key chains, mugs, picture frames, T-shirts, postcards, shirt pins, water bottles and even 3-D puzzles that call the building the tallest in the country fill shelves in the store of the 110-story tower.

For now, the message is accurate, but it won't be for much longer.

In November, the nationally recognized Council on Tall Buildings and Urban Habitat ruled that New York City's newly built 1 World Trade Center—standing at 1,776 feet, compared with the Willis Tower's 1,451 feet—takes the title.

Willis Tower officials will have to make a few alterations—in addition to redesigning those souvenirs—when the changeover takes place.

For instance, once the tower's 1.6 million annual visitors pay admission to its Skydeck Chicago observatory, they're escorted through a hallway that boasts facts and figures about Chicago icons.

One of the last vignettes they read says they're standing inside "the tallest building in the Western Hemisphere."

On the 60-second ride up the elevator to the observatory, a video repeats the fact.

At the end of the tour, visitors find a machine that smashes pennies into an engraved copper souvenir that also says "the tallest building in the Western Hemisphere."

"We have plenty of time to make adjustments," said Randy Stancik, a spokesman for Willis Tower.

Officials likely have at least a few months to do so. For the title to officially apply to 1 World

Trade Center, that building must be structurally and architecturally complete, fully clad and open at least partially for business, said Daniel Safarik, a spokesman for the Council on Tall

Buildings and Urban Habitat, via email.

Construction of the New York building is expected to be complete early this year, with its first tenants moving in by early 2015, said Anthony Hayes, a spokesman for the Port Authority of New York & New Jersey. He also couldn't say when the title would stick.

Regardless, browsers in Willis Tower's gift shops said they didn't care that their souvenirs would soon be inaccurate.

"If it's the tallest or the second-tallest, it wouldn't affect my purchasing of any items here," said Georg Petmecky, who was visiting Chicago from Tennessee. "It's a nice view, that's what I get out of it."

There hasn't been a rush on tallest-building products by nostalgic Chicagoans who may want to own a piece of history, according to Daniel Alamo, a supervisor in one of the tower's gift shops. "The reason they come [to] the building is the experience," he said.

If you've ever read about personal finance for longer than approximately five seconds, you've probably heard a variation on this:

"For the price of a latte a day, you could retire comfortably in 40 years! You could pay off your student loans! You could pay for a castle in Scotland! With a personal trainer! And a pony! How DARE you spend your hard-earned cash on something as silly as espresso?"

Like a lot of personal finance advice, it makes sense on paper, but absolutely none in real life.

Mike Dang, a writer for thebillfold.com, put it this way in a post last year: "The majority of people I know aren't wildly irresponsible. They're not buying luxury cars and designer clothing and $5 lattes every day (ah, the latte factor!—every personal finance guru's favorite example). They're dealing with shrinking salaries, skyrocketing health care and education costs, a weak economy that has resulted in job loss. ... All the bike-riding and TV cable canceling wasn't going to help them. Quitting your yoga class isn't going to fix pay inequality or result in employer-supported maternity leave appearing in the office."

Dang nails it: The latte rule doesn't take into account the human factor. What if that latte is the only nice moment in your day? What if that new lipstick gives you the kind of boost that brightens your whole week? If your Netflix subscription makes your day-to-day life a little saner, who am I to tell you not to go for it?

Say that to certain financial gurus, and they'll look at you like you're Bernie Madoff. How DARE you get a $15 pedicure when you could be contributing to your emergency savings? What kind of monster are you?

The truth is, in most cases, giving up life's little pleasures will not fix all your problems—and living like a hermit might just make you crazy.

Here are three things to focus on instead. I promise they're better ways to spend your energy than fretting over a coffee or two.

Set up automatic savings transfers if you can. Some banks will let you automatically put a few cents from your checking account into your savings account every time you use your credit or debit cards. That means every time you swipe at Starbucks, you add a little bit to your nest egg. Who's virtuous now?

OK, are you all caffeinated? Fantastic. Work on getting a promotion, a raise or a better job. Start making yourself invaluable to your bosses or polishing your resume. When you get that richly deserved pay bump, you can treat yourself to a latte with even less worry.

Work the system. Lobby your lawmakers for better student loan rules, sensible finance reform or whatever else floats your financial boat. Spend your time getting educated, instead of stressing over that peppermint mocha.

Ventra is coming (for real)

New fare system starting to meet performance requirements set by CTA

Chicago Tribune

The CTA contractor responsible for the Ventra fare system is for the first time meeting performance requirements that will allow it to be paid and for the transit agency to start phasing out old fare cards, officials said Friday.

But neither step will be taken until Cubic Transportation Systems meets the three specific performance standards for another month, transit officials said. It has satisfied all three since Jan. 1, the CTA said.

Cubic needs to ensure that customers who call the Ventra hotline wait less than five minutes to speak to an operator; Ventra fare readers on buses and at rail turnstiles process transactions in 2.5 seconds or less 99 percent of the time; and 99 percent of Ventra equipment is functioning.

CTA President Forrest Claypool set those requirements in November in response to what he called unacceptable customer service by Cubic and technical problems that led to some Ventra customers being double-charged for fares or given free rides because Ventra card readers or computer servers failed.

So far, the CTA has not paid Cubic any money on its $454 million contract, CTA officials said.

In October, the CTA halted the phaseout of its "legacy" fare cards—magnetic-stripe, Chicago Card and Chicago Card Plus cards. The CTA has not announced yet when it will discontinue those cards. But Cubic's improved

The average Ventra processing time is less than a second on buses and more than a half-second on rail, according to a report. ZIGNEW OZDAN/TRIBUNE FILE performance signals that the CTA could make that decision as early as next month.

The number of phone calls made to the Ventra customer hotline, which is down from almost 12,000 calls Dec. 2, still exceeded 4,000 calls Jan. 7, the CTA reported in a performance score card released Friday.

On Tuesday, 9 percent of calls were placed on hold, and 4.5 percent of the callers hung up. The CTA said hold times have remained less than 5 minutes since mid-November and all calls are now handled by a trained operator, eliminating the need for callbacks.

The latest sampling of "tap times"—how long it takes to process a Ventra fare transaction—shows that the average on buses is just less than a second (0.96 of a second), and on rail, a shade more than a half-second (0.55 of a second). Cubic is required under the CTA contract to provide processing times of a half-second or less.

World dignitaries expected for Sharon's funeral

1 JERUSALEM A state ceremony in memory of former Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon will be held Monday at the parliament building in Jerusalem, officials announced.

Services for Sharon, who died Saturday at 85 after being incapacitated for years by a stroke, are expected to draw dignitaries from around the world and thousands of admirers in Israel.

After the memorial ceremony Monday, the military funeral procession will leave Jerusalem for Latroun, where Sharon was injured in battle in 1948. The top army command will convene there for a special commemorative session at the battleground site, which now houses a military museum and memorial.

Sharon will be laid to rest on a hilltop at Sycamore Ranch, his family sheep farm and home in southern Israel. Despite a reserved plot in Jerusalem's Mt. Herzl national cemetery dedicated to the nation's leaders, Sharon wanted to be buried on the farm.

W.Va. water supply tainted

2 CHARLESTON, W.Va. Restaurants and shops reopened Sunday in parts of West Virginia where the water supply was poisoned by a chemical spill, although up to 300,000 people spent a fourth day unable to use tap water for anything besides flushing toilets.

State government officials, the utility company West Virginia American Water and the National Guard were continuing to test the water supply on Sunday after as much as 7,500 gallons of an industrial chemical leaked into the Elk River on Thursday.

It could still be several days before people in nine counties and Charleston, the state capital and largest city, can once again use the water from their faucets for drinking, cooking and bathing.

A dozen restaurants in Charleston had been allowed to reopen by Sunday afternoon by the Kanawha-Charleston Health Department after assuring officials that they have secured a source of potable water.

Nearly 200 groceries, supermarkets and drugstores also have been allowed to reopen across the affected area.

Frustrations, however, continue to mount, with West Virginians lamenting the toll the outage has taken on their health and personal hygiene.

"It feels like we've all been living on junk food these past couple days," Josephine Ritter, a 40-year-old hairstylist, said outside a recently reopened 7-Eleven convenience store in Charleston.

"You can't cook or clean or anything. It's just bottled water and potato chips every day."

The emergency began last week after a spillage from a tank belonging to Freedom Industries, a Charleston company that makes chemicals for the mining, steel and cement industries, authorities said.

The spill happened about a mile upriver from a West Virginia American Water treatment plant. President Obama declared it an emergency, and the Federal Emergency

'Protest zone' miles from Olympic sites

5 Russia's deputy prime minister said Friday that a protest zone at the 2014 Sochi Olympics would be located in the village of Khost, about seven miles from the nearest Olympic venues. Demonstrations must be unrelated to the Winter Games and organizers must receive permission from regional authorities, according to the U.S. State Department.

Foot found on Florida beach identified

6 The human foot found on a southeast Florida beach Jan. 1 has been matched by investigators using DNA to a missing local boater. Dominic Porcaro, 64, had been missing since Dec. 19, when his boat washed ashore in Juno Beach in Palm Beach County. The foot was found 13 days later by a beach walker about 20 miles north.

7 steps to fix the Bears defense via free agency

Alex Quigley

» @alexquigley

Welp, the Bears paid Jay Cutler. Paid him like they landed on Boardwalk with three hotels and a Risk ten-army on top. (You make some rules changes to get through Chicago winters.) And whether or not you agree they overpaid for

No. 6, all Bears fans can agree the defense has to get fixed real quick-like.

With the 14th pick in the upcoming draft, the Bears have a shot at a great playmaker on defense, such as Michigan State cornerback Darqueze Dennard, Florida defensive end Dominique Easley or even Alabama safety Ha Ha Clinton-Dix. If you're not a big college football fan, I feel I must assure you that final name is not a "Key & Peele" gag. Really.

But if your team needs an instant boost, there's no better way than free agency. Even after the new deals signed by Cutler, cornerback Tim Jennings, fullback Tony Fiammetta, kicker Robbie Gould and guard Matt Slauson, the Bears remain about $11.5 million under the 2014 salary cap. And that's before restructuring or cutting Julius Peppers' huge contract, so expect them to have around $20 million to blow. Much like the example of Riskopoly above, the Bears need to get creative to patch those holes.

Let's go shopping!

NFL DIVISIONAL PLAYOFFS

Seattle 23, New Orleans 15
San Francisco 23, Carolina 10
New England 43, Indianapolis 22
Denver 24, San Diego 17

CHAMPIONSHIP SUNDAY

New England at Denver,
2 p.m. Sunday, CBS
San Francisco at Seattle,
5:30 p.m. Sunday, Fox

1. Henry Melton, DT

Oh yeah, that guy! Melton's season-ending injury effectively put a big flashing arrow pointing straight up the gut of the defense. The Bears allowed 161.4 rushing yards per game in 2013, and 101.7 with him in 2012. His off-field incident probably didn't raise his asking price.

Cash flow: $8,000,000 spent, $12,000,000 remaining

2. Chris Gamble, DB

Carolina cut its all-time interception leader after deciding not to—uh, gamble—on his high salary. So the veteran retired. But even after not playing in 2013, he's only 30 years old. POPPIN TAGS, AMIRITE? "high five up, left hanging by everyone"

Cash flow: $2,200,000 spent, $9,800,000 remaining

3. Terrell Owens, WR

He's tall and could probably play some coverage and isn't doing anything right now.

Cash flow: $25 (for a couple of sandwiches) spent, $9,799,975 remaining

4. Nails, DT

I mean, like, 1,280 boxes of nails. The big ones they use for roofing. Just dump 'em out at the line of scrimmage every down. Eighty defensive snaps per game. 16 games next season.

Cash flow: $8.99 per box = $11,507.20 spent, $9,788,467.80 remaining

5. Ashton Kutcher, STOPPER

If the guy can stop the momentum of "Two And a Half Men," he can stop Reggie Bush, right? And at $750,000 per episode, they can just use him for divisional games.

Cash flow: $4,500,000 spent, $5,288,467.80 remaining

6. Love, Universal

It's all around you.

Cash flow: Free, $5,288,467.80 remaining

7. Used Fighter Jet, Safety

I know a guy in Panama. And Chris Conte is NOT allowed to even TOUCH this thing.

Cash flow: $5,126,032 spent, $162,435.80 remaining

And y'know what, George McCaskey, I'll take that $162K for myself. Call it a finders' fee for that next Lombardi Trophy.

1	Let's have your Australian Open prediction.	A guy with a lot of consonants in his last name will win. Bet on it!	I predict I will watch the highlights on "SportsCenter."	"Crocodile Dundee 3" will begin filming on the back nine.	Tennis will be played, that's for sure!	Tourney officials serve Vegemite sandwiches before matches and all players are rushed to a nearby hospital.
2	Convince Masahiro Tanaka to play in Chicago.	Uh, we promise not to make those racist T-shirts we made when Fukudome came?	Rise Sushi is on Southport near the park. Great joint!	Why threaten U.S.-Japan relations?	Do you hate winning but love pizza? This is the place for you.	THE KID IS 25 AND MAKES $400M PLAYING FOR THE "GOLDEN EAGLES." WHY WOULD HE EVER LEAVE?!
3	What will Alex Rodriguez do during his season-long suspension?	Hook up with attractive women and spend money. Are we sure he's being punished enough?	Yoga with Madonna.	I hear Madonna has got nothing better to do ...	Rock back and forth in a million-dollar chair in a multimillion-dollar home, insisting he's gotten a raw deal.	Adopt a recently surrendered dog named Wrigley.
4	A major league ballplayer was injured by his dog, Wrigley. Discuss.	Like his namesake, how much you wanna bet that dog smells faintly of pee all the time?	The curse continues and has transcended to the pet world! I blame Shawon Dunston.	Former Bears QB Brian Griese plays baseball now? Does the dog have a drinking problem?	Just another "Cubbie Occurrence."	This simply proves nothing good has ever come from anything named "Wrigley."
5	The Bulls have won five straight again. How encouraged are you?	VERY. I think a lot of folks gave up on the Bulls after the Deng/Rose ordeals. You shouldn't have.	As encouraged as I was when they hired Tim Floyd.	This team can't even make the draft lottery properly. Sheesh.	Terribly discouraged. This tanking thing is not going well at all.	If the Chicago Bulls LOST five straight, I'd be dancing in the streets. Once again: I. AM. FROM. DETROIT.

'HE WOULD ASK ME TO INJECT'

Alex Rodriguez
REUTERS FILE

Founder of former Biogenesis clinic opens up about alleged PED use

The you-know-what has really hit the fan for Alex Rodriguez again.

Anthony Bosch, founder of former South Florida anti-aging clinic Biogenesis, said in an interview with "60 Minutes" that the New York Yankees third baseman was meticulous about his use of performance-enhancing drugs.

Bosch

Bosch also said he injected drugs into Rodriguez.

The interview aired Sunday night.

Rodriguez's 211-game suspension, handed down by Major League Baseball for his connection to Biogenesis, was shortened to 162 games by an arbitrator Saturday.

The interview, as well as text messages between Bosch and Rodriguez, indicate that Rodriguez was obsessed with using PEDs to help him try to become the only major-

ACCORDING TO CBS, BOSCH ALSO CLAIMS THAT ...

- ▶ Rodriguez paid him $12,000 a month in cash
- ▶ Rodriguez's mission was to hit 800 home runs and that the player asked Bosch for what he gave MLB player Manny Ramirez, a former Bosch client
- ▶ Text messages between Bosch and Rodriguez indicate they at times communicated daily about what substances the player took
- ▶ Rodriguez's associates issued death threats against him

“Alex cared. ... He would study the product. He would study the substances. He would study the dosages, because he wanted to achieve all his human performance ... objectives.”

leaguer to reach 800 home runs. He has 654 homers.

Bosch injected drugs into Rodriguez because he was "scared of needles."

"So at times, he would ask me to inject," Bosch said.

Bosch described Rodriguez as secretive and himself as accommodating.

"Try to use service elevators. Careful. Tons of eyes," Rodriguez wrote to Bosch in a text message in June 2012 in Atlanta.

Bosch said in the interview that Rodriguez paid $12,000 per month for PEDs from Bosch.

"Alex cared. Alex wanted to know," Bosch said. "He would study the product. He would study the substances. He would study the dosages, because he wanted to achieve all his human performance or in this case, sports performance, objectives. And the most important one was the 800 home run club."

NUCCIO DIMUZZO/TRIBUNE FILE

Still makes him sick

Joakim Noah refused to speak to reporters immediately after the Bulls traded his friend Luol Deng to Cleveland. Well, he broke his silence Sunday, and he's still not exactly happy. "A lot of people say this is a business, and all that, but this game is more than a business to me. I put everything I've got into this. Lu was the same way, so it was hard for me to digest. That's just my perspective. Everybody has a different job. I'm not mad at anybody."

Marian Hossa
US PRESSWIRE

Blackhawks 5, Edmonton 3

A power-play goal by Marian Hossa—one of three in the second period—was the spark the Blackhawks needed to get past the Oilers. Hossa's 17th goal of the season broke a 2-2 tie. Andrew Shaw (12) and Jonathan Toews (17) also scored in the period. Antti Raanta saved 18 shots in the game.

Golden Globes keeps it weird

Matt Pais

» @mattpais

Combining movies and TV, a live broadcast and drinking celebs always creates the potential for oddness. But with the exception of the inevitable excellence of hosts Tina Fey and Amy Poehler (who also won!), Sunday's Golden Globes was particularly strange.

Jared Leto, who took time off from a terrible band to make "Dallas Buyers Club," opened his best supporting actor acceptance speech (for a serious role as a transgender woman with AIDS) with numerous bad jokes about Brazilian waxing. Amy Adams ("American Hustle") was played off the stage in the middle of a sweet story about her career, yet TV's best supporting actress, Jacqueline Bisset ("Dancing on the Edge"), received seemingly infinite time to say almost nothing.

Sometimes the stars of the best picture noms introduced their own movies, like Jonah Hill and Margot Robbie with "The Wolf of Wall Street." Yet Jim Carrey (effectively mocking Shia LaBeouf) introduced "American Hustle" even though nearly everyone from the movie was on hand.

Nothing could be as bad as E!'s red carpet coverage identifying Michael J. Fox's 1991 Parkinson's disease diagnosis as a "fun fact." Still, it's an unusual night when Andy Samberg ("Brooklyn Nine-Nine") wins in a category containing Don Cheadle ("House of Lies"), and the frontman of Edward Sharpe and the Magnetic Zeros wins for scoring a Robert Redford movie ("All is Lost").

Then there's Bono. After U2 won best original song for an average contribution to the mediocre "Mandela: Long Walk to Freedom," he awkwardly pulled back from a hug from Diddy—who sang, "Let it flow" to the band as if he were singing "Let it Snow." What is happening?

Several things were awesome, of course. Fey and Poehler opened the show with a monologue that had the bite of their time on "SNL," with Fey noting that Matthew McConaughey's 45-pound weight loss for "Dallas Buyers Club" is "what actresses call 'being in a movie.' " "12 Years a Slave" justly won best drama, and Spike Jonze, accepting best screenplay for "Her," responded to the music playing him off by saying, "Hey, wait, hold on. I just started."

Looseness like that—seen also as Matt Damon noted he forgot his glasses and Emma Thompson arrived onstage with her shoes in one hand and a drink in the other—compensated for frustrating results like "American Hustle" winning best musical or comedy, Leonardo DiCaprio defeating Oscar Isaac for best actor in a musical or comedy and Alfonso Cuarón taking best director for "Gravity" over Steve McQueen and "12 Years a Slave."

Still, let us rejoice in McConaughey's terrific acceptance speech and Poehler winning for the fantastic "Parks and Recreation" and giggling with humility about how she never wins stuff like this.

And Jennifer Lawrence (best supporting actress for "American Hustle") showing that even a globally adored star winning for the second consecutive year can still get authentically nervous in the limelight.

You didn't think this story wouldn't mention Lawrence, did you? That would be totally bizarre.

Prison sex jokes?

SHOW PATROL

Curt Wagner

■ cwwagner@tribune.com
■ @showpatrol

I admit it; I'm not a huge fan of rap music. So I wasn't expecting to like FX's animated rap comedy, "Chosen." What's surprising is how much more I like the musical segments than the rest of it.

When the gay white "rappist" of the title openly boasts about his sexuality with the same bravado as any straight rapper would about his, the only slightly amusing "Chosen" finally gets real, yo.

The show, from former "Eastbound & Down" writer's assistant Grant Dekernion and produced by the "Eastbound" (David Gordon Green, Danny McBride) and "Archer" teams (Adam Reed, Matt Thompson), is so bloated with lame prison sex jokes and "I like penises" gags that it loses sight of any worthwhile social commentary about the rap world or, say, busting fear-baiting, anti-gay stereotypes in general.

Chosen

9:30 p.m. Monday, FX

Chosen (voiced by Bobby Moynihan) is sent to prison after being hilariously set up by Phantasm (Method Man), a jealous member of his former rap group called Phresh Phriends, which also included Crisco (Hannibal Buress) and Ricky (Michael Pena). After going from sexual assault victim to attacker in prison, a newly butch Chosen is freed and reunites with his pals. Together they and their new manager, a drug-taking, dirty ol' cameraman (Danny McBride), begin their quest to take down Phantasm. And a rap feud is born.

"Chosen" will get more compelling once it focuses on that feud over loutish buffoonery and references to prison sex—which aren't that funny even the first five times they're made. For now, though, it simply mines the gay rapper premise for cheap laughs.

How funny and pathetic to open a film with text on-screen—"Legend tells of a powerful box that could turn anything to gold"—while one of the stars

(Sam Neill) also reads those words. Imagine if the opening crawl of "Star Wars" included voiceover from Yoda.

Of course, a family-friendly adventure story actually called "The Adventurer" practically has the word "lame" hovering overhead. Adapted from the first book in G.P. Taylor's "Mariah Mundi" series, "The Curse of the Midas Box" does not actually contain a curse. (Unless I missed that while realizing that I now know what a dollar-store "Indiana Jones" artifact looks like.)

In a part that Robert Downey Jr. would nail but never accept, the insufficiently zany Michael Sheen ("Midnight in Paris"), a set of long sideburns and an earring play Captain Will Charity, a member of a secret organization called The Bureau of Antiquities. No, these agents don't go around antiquing. The BOA protects valuable artifacts, which is why Charity wants to stop the evil Otto Luger (Neill) from acquiring the titular box. A box that turns anything to gold could make banks worthless! Though since the box is pretty small, it just begs questions like, "Why would anyone want to turn, say, sushi into gold?"

Charity enlists young but not young enough Mariah Mundi (painfully anonymous Aneurin Barnard) to assist on the case, taking Mariah to a hotel where he encounters a spicy manager (Lena Headey of "Game of Thrones") and tormented seamstress (Mella

'The Adventurer: The Curse of the Midas Box'

Carron) with whom he experiences what I assume was meant to register as sparks.

Making "The Mummy" franchise look masterful, the low-budget, frustratingly tame "Adventurer" forces Mariah on a high-seas voyage by map and contains stunts and costumes so cheap they should have been scrapped. The performances and lines like "Not everything will be as it seems" offer no greater value.

For what it's worth, swap in Downey Jr., Hugh Jackman, Nicole Kidman and anyone but Barnard in the leads and the simplistic "Midas Box" still would be a weak franchise starter, with meager hope of making it to a sequel. Mere mention of buried treasure and amulets and so forth don't automatically mean international intrigue, which your little brother can tell you when he wakes up.

"The Selfish Giant" contains subtitles, even though the U.K.-set drama is in English. Probably because not all American viewers can understand terms like "Pikey scruff" through the thick accents, and those who can simply will think, "Did he just say 'pikey scruff'?"

However, unlike the 2013 Chicago International Film Festival entry "Lad: A Yorkshire Story"—I know you didn't see that, but the title speaks volumes—"The Selfish Giant" isn't so dully British that it was foolish to bring it across the pond. Thirteen-year-old Arbor (Conner Chapman) is troublesome and fearless, with the stones to tell cops to take their shoes off when coming into his house. Fittingly, the scrappy kid wants to be a scrap-man—making money off found/stolen wire and metal instead of going to school. When he's expelled (which is called, more daintily, "excluded"), he tells his suspended pal Swifty (Shaun Thomas), "Brilliant, eh? Don't have to go to school."

Written and directed by Cannes award-winner Clio Barnard, "The Selfish Giant," based on an Oscar Wilde story, creates a strong sense of its blue-collar factory town and the unhappy people who live there. Barnard is a promising filmmaker, already showing a lot of confidence in her feature debut. She neither rushes the story nor lets it flatline, and deserves some credit for the immensely believable friendship depicted by the young first-time actors.

!!! The Selfish Giant NR

It gives little away to say that the slow "Giant" goes somewhere inevitably tragic, and it's no surprise who bears the greatest weight of the incident. The film might make a devastating short, with the beautifully captured scenic detail and quantity of story more in balance.

Yet under the kids' rebellion and the local guy named Kitten (Sean Gilder) who treats youngsters like adults is a quietly upsetting coming-of-age story about the many people and places that can be considered a "bad influence," and the fact that not everyone gets much of a practical chance to get it right. Which isn't an excuse; it's just the way life is sometimes.

Infidelity! Dirty family secrets! Double-crossing! It's the formula for daytime melodrama, but Asghar Farhadi's "The Past" never feels like a soap opera or an "August: Osage County" shouting match. Maybe it's because no one smashes a wine glass or discovers a long-lost evil twin. (Unfortunately.) It's also because Farhadi has such a steady command of drama. As in the superior "A Separation," "The Past" sets up a complicated, extreme-but-feasible situation and observes the domino effect of decisions and emotions.

After four years away in Iran, Ahmad (Ali Mosaffa) returns to France and discovers his wife, Marie (Berenice Bejo, Best Supporting Actress nominee for "The Artist"), now lives with and plans to marry Samir (Tahar Rahim of "A Prophet"). Marie's daughter Lucie

!!! The Past

(Pauline Burlet) wouldn't be thrilled anyway, but she's especially upset because Samir's still married to a woman who's been in a coma for several months. Then Marie says she's pregnant, a surprising act comes to light, and a difficult scenario goes from a 9 to a 14 on a 1-to-10 scale of tough business.

"The Past" doesn't have the same tense momentum or power of "A Separation." Yet even in its measured pacing, the film easily commands attention. These are rich and very well-acted characters, and even if their problems aren't relatable, what's universal is the struggle to determine whom to blame and if that even matters. After all, the regret may linger regardless—one of the many ways the past and "The Past" can stick around whether you want them to or not.

ROMANCE PLANET

BY JENNIFER SHEPHERD | READ MORE AT LIPSTICKMYSTIC.COM

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19

The sun in your sign is boosting your confidence. Ask someone out even if you're convinced that he or she will reject you. Your chances of getting lucky are big for the next two weeks.

Cancer June 22-July 22

The full moon in your sign is bringing pent-up desires to the surface. That hot new neighbor is driving you crazy. That cute girl at your office is hypnotizing you with her killer curves.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 1

Mars has you tying up some loose ends. You finally let that guy who has a huge crush on you know that you just want to be friends. At last, you told your ex-girlfriend to stop contacting you so that you can move on with your life.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22

As the sun moves opposite your sign, take it easy. Don't fall in love with someone you meet online, because it's highly likely he weighs 400 pounds or she has six kids.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

You're not sure what to think about somebody. A moon opposition is only adding to your confusion. You wonder if that guy you met is into you or annoyed with you.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22

The sun has you figuring out how to make a relationship better. You're in a "50 Shades of Grey" discussion forum, and you've rehearsed phrases like, "Here's my list of things I love about you."

Aries March 21-April 19

You're feeling restless, and it's not just because of Uranus. You're wondering if you're cut out for long-term relationships. Fire signs need to constantly reinvent themselves in the bedroom.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

You're obsessed with issues of justice. It wasn't cool for your guy to hook up with his ex, even though you aren't exclusive. It wasn't right for your girl to lie about being previously married.

Taurus April 20-May 20

Don't rely too much on just one person. It's not your boyfriend's job to complete you. It's not your wife's responsibility to make you feel better about your hairline.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21

A sensitive moon is making you lustier than ever. You'll call in sick to work and spend a lazy day with your lover. Or you'll demand that hottie you've been chasing agrees to meet you for a late dinner.

Gemini May 21-June 21

Someone around you could be super emotional, courtesy of Jupiter. You'll probably just want to go back to your video games and ignore this person.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21

You're going back and forth about a relationship. Mercury is increasing your need to be with someone, but you want perfection. If somebody has a bad financial history or a questionable moral code, this might not be the right person.

“It’s not your typical horror movie where things jump out at you. ... If this happened in the real world, how would it happen?”

—Zach Gilford on the approach to making “Devil’s Due”

Zach Gilford’s new movie isn’t your ordinary horror flick

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

Luis Gomez

► @TribLuis

Zach Gilford had a hard time listening to “Thriller,” Michael Jackson’s classic song about things that go bump in the night, when he was a child growing up in Evanston. And the “Friday Night Lights” actor said it had nothing to do with the menacing werewolf or dancing zombies featured in the music video.

“I would listen to music before I went to sleep on my yellow Sony Walkman when I was 7 and put on the Michael Jackson tape,” Gilford said last week over the phone from L.A. “When the guy came on at the end of ‘Thriller’ talking about [‘Darkness falls across the land, the midnight hour is close at hand’], I was like ‘What is that?’ I thought the devil was coming through my headphones. I couldn’t listen to ‘Thriller’ [for a long time]. Honestly, it was the thing that scared me the most as a kid.”

Now 31, Gilford will have a hand in scaring others, the way Vincent Price’s voice scared him, when he appears in two horror films this year: “Devil’s Due” and “The Purge 2.” Gilford plays half of an expectant couple in “Devil’s Due,” a found-footage film that opens Friday. It’s being called a contemporary “Rosemary’s Baby” because of its satanic pregnancy theme. He said he was drawn to the script because it was a love story gone awry in which you actually like and cheer for the couple, unlike in some horror movies where the protagonists are so irritating you cheer against them.

“It’s not your typical horror movie where things jump out at you,” Gilford said. “It felt like we were always fighting against the genre. We really focused on making the movie logical with, obviously, an unreal idea of a devil baby: If this happened in the real world, how would it happen?”

He also clicked with Radio Silence productions, the quartet behind “Devil’s Due” and the last short film featured in 2012’s “V/H/S.” And that’s become very important to Gilford, who said he looks for roles that he will enjoy filming and tries to avoid the ones in which “I want to shoot myself in the face the whole time,” even if they might sound like better projects. “You have to enjoy what you do,” he said.

red hot

I like the way that I look now better than when I was 25.” —Cameron Diaz, to People, on aging

Big break

Aspiring rappers anywhere could become a “Chozen” one, thanks to FX’s promotional “Dope RhymeZ” contest. In support of the series premiere of “Chozen” (9:30 p.m. Monday), the network is sponsoring a contest in which rappers can submit hip-hop lyrics for the chance to record the track with the help of New York music studio professionals. Aspiring Yeezys should enter at thisischozen.com by Wednesday.

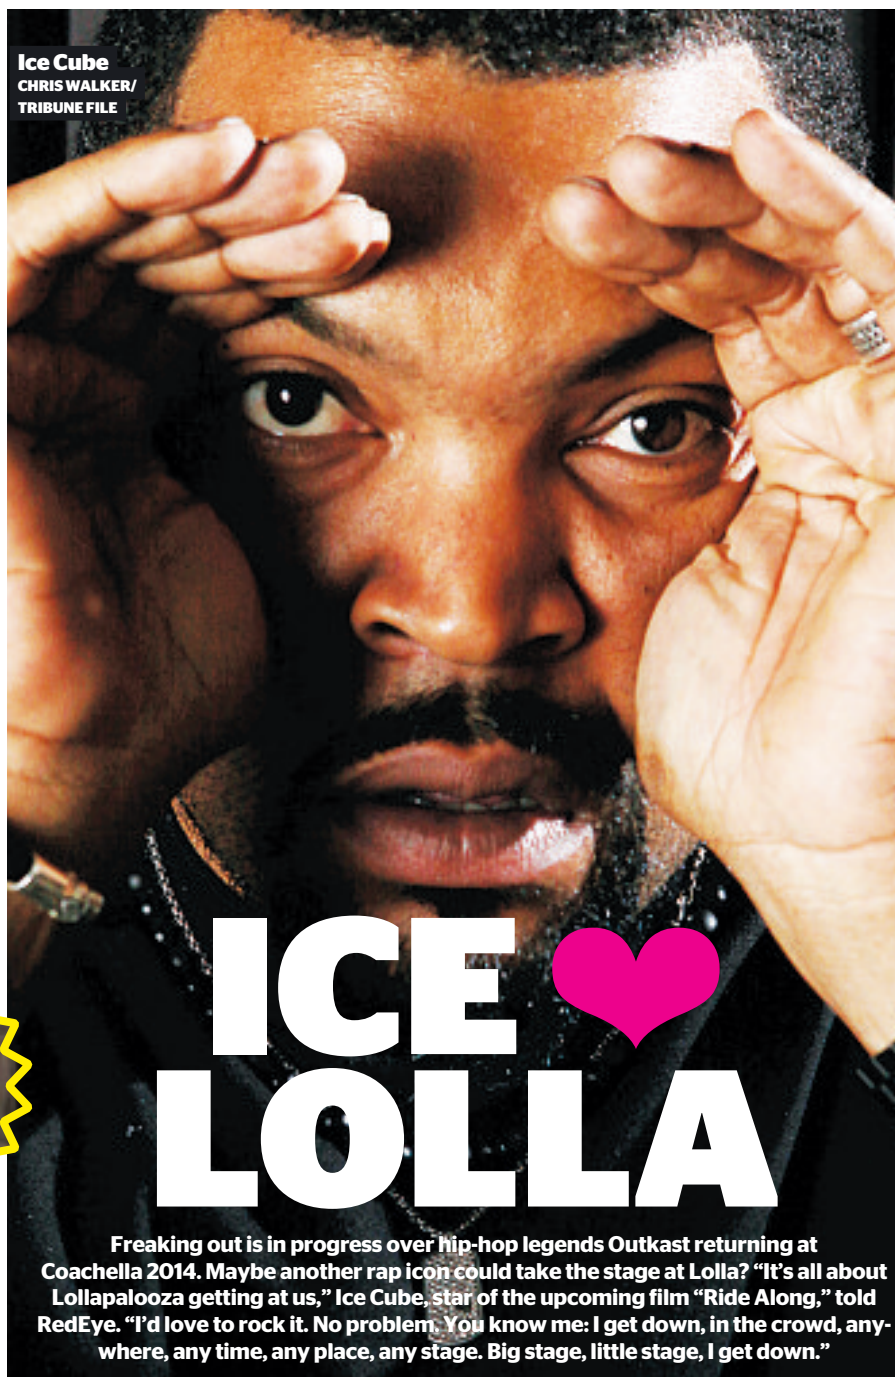

HOT DATE

JAN. 13 (That’s today!) HBO will debut Sunday’s “Girls” premiere on YouTube at 9 a.m., according to mashable.com. Well, that’s much easier than pirating for those of us who, ahem, can’t afford HBO.

Save the dates!

Mark your calendars, TV nerds. AMC announced several premiere dates for your favorite shows last week: “Mad Men” will debut April 13, the new spy drama “Turn” will begin April 6, and “Better Call Saul,” the “Breaking Bad” spinoff, will premiere sometime in November. In the meantime, keep an eye out for the “Walking Dead” midseason premiere Feb. 9.

Freaking out is in progress over hip-hop legends Outkast returning at Coachella 2014. Maybe another rap icon could take the stage at Lolla? “It’s all about Lollapalooza getting at us,” Ice Cube, star of the upcoming film “Ride Along,” told RedEye. “I’d love to rock it. No problem. You know me: I get down, in the crowd, anywhere, any time, any place, any stage. Big stage, little stage, I get down.”

Wedding belle

Pamela Anderson has tied the knot—yes, again—to film producer Rick Salomon—yes, again. Eonline.com reports that the former “Baywatch” star remarried Salomon recently; the two were first wed in October 2007 and filed for divorce two months later. The diamond on Anderson’s ring finger is, like, the size of a toddler, so it MUST be true love this time!

A very smelly cry for help

Justin Bieber is in hot water again. The eternally Troubled Teen is being investigated after allegations that he egged his neighbor’s house in full view of the people on the balcony, according to the Associated Press. Supposedly there’s video of the incident and everything, which will surely FINALLY give Bieber the attention he so desperately craves.
